Name That Book!
Trivia Game

Use these sentences from the Grades 3-5 current Sunshine State Young Readers Award Program for a great trivia game!

The Fourteenth Goldfish by Jennifer L. Holm

" 'Average people just give up at the obstacles we face every day. Scientists fail again and again and again. Sometimes for our whole lives. But we don't give up, because we want to solve the puzzle.'." (p. 47 HB)

"I'm not a big fairy-tale fan. Mostly because I always wonder about the after part of happily ever after. Like in "The Three Little Pigs." What happened after the third pig cooked the wolf in the pot? Did he hold a funeral and let the wolf's friends know? Or with "Cinderella". Sure, she got the prince, but what about the stepsisters? They were still her family. Did she have to see them at Thanksgiving dinner? Talk about awkward." (p.75 HB)

" Were we two objects in motion, hurtling through space, and then an external force – middle school, volleyball, life – hit us?" (p. 106, HB)

" 'Still, those stories could use some romance", my mom points out.
"There's lots of romance," I insist. She looks confused. "Really? Who are they in love with?"
"Possibility'." (p.120, HB)

"For my parents, costumes are no big thing. It's part of their job, like a uniform.
But I think what you wear on Halloween is important. It says something about you – who you are and what you want to be. There's got to be a reason why so many girls go around dressed as princesses and witches" (p.125 HB)

"And then I look around for my grandfather. He's slumped in a chair on the side of the room, his head nodding into his chest. Fast asleep. Like an old man." (P. 130 HB)

" 'How many candles will you have on your cake this year?' I ask my grandfather. 'What?' he asks. 'For your birthday. Because of the T. melvinus,' I explain. "Will you have seventy-seven candles or, like, fourteen?' My grandfather blinks and then says, 'I don't believe in birthdays.' " (p. 134 HB)